

Swipe Right:

BIKESHARE STATIONS

Over half of all vehicle trips are less than 3 miles in distance.

Fewer cars on the road = fewer traffic fatalities, reduced air pollution,
and an overall sexier city.

So basically any alternative transit options are a net positive for cities.

Plus bikes are really fun bikeshare features:

go outside its beautiful feel the wind on your face

dont need to worry about it getting stolen

ebikes go zoouuuuuuuuum up the big hills

also dont need to worry about finding parking ever again

bc its not a car especially good in boulder tons of bikeshare stations all the green lines on this map are off-road bike/pedestrian paths! look at all those!

Swipe Left:

PAYING WITH YOUR PHONE

Convenient in a way that is bad for me

Makes money more ephemeral, so I forget how much I'm spending

Also increases my general reliance on my phone, which is no bueno

Lots of cash-only transactions that I am PARTICULARLY enthusiastic about supporting:

- Street performers
 - Tamale ladies
- Kids lemonade stands

Also every interaction with a cashier now involves five seconds of me staring at my phone to unlock tap-to-pay, thus interrupting what might have been a fleeting moment of human contact in an increasingly isolated world, building up an ever-widening technological barrier between me and the person behind the counter, and like yeah its not like me and the cashier were gonna have a super meaningful connection if i paid in cash but it is pretty wild that the entire focus of the interaction has fundamentally shifted to me being on my phone yet again instead of looking at the other person idk it just bugs me the end